Beginnings require that you open new doors.
In our studies, the new often mingles with the old as we examine the wisdom that our Torah imparts. Genesis describes that people are granted the gift of freedom, the ability to be creative and transformative. Most of all, people are endowed with remarkable capabilities of dialogue with which to express their intellect. Amazing gifts indeed. But, how does one choose to live with a sense of responsibility? that is the question. Join us; everyone is welcome.

*P*arashat Bereisheet

Time has not diminished the power or the majesty of the familiar biblical account of the creation of the world, nor has the familiarity dulled its impact. It still moves us, conveying so much in so few words. What kind of world does the Torah envision God creating? The opening chapters of Genesis are not a scientific account of the origins of the universe. The Torah is a book of mortality, not cosmology. Its overriding concern, from the first verse to the last, is our relationship to God, truth about life rather than scientific truths. It describes the world God fashioned as "good", a statement no scientific account can make.
