"Periodically, we are forced to experience the terror of a flood, a shattering of the very foundations of our world, We observe a curious dance of creation and destruction." Carol Ochs In Genesis, we learn that God chose a new Adam. His name was Noah. Can you imagine the chaos and the darkness that Noah and his family witnessed? Can you even imagine the anguish, their isolation and their many challenges? In rebuilding and redefining, we all falter, yet we strive to comfort, heal and mend our world. If you have not already signed up, contact alan@biz120.com

Parashat Beresheet

Time has not diminished the power or the majesty of the familiar biblical account of the creation of the world, nor has the familiarity dulled its impact. It still moves us, conveying so much in so few words. What kind of world does the Torah envision God creating? The opening chapters of Genesis are not a scientific account of the origins of the universe. The Torah is a book of mortality, not cosmology. Its overriding concern, from the first verse to the last, is our relationship to God, truth about life rather than scientific truths. It describes the world God fashioned as "good", a statement no scientific account can make.
